But enough about us, it's time to let you know about the game itself, just in case you still didn't try Counter-Strike 1.6 and are interested about what it's all about. Well, the idea is pretty simple: a good old bad vs evil scenario, this time it's terrorists against, you guessed it, counter-terrorist. Players are divided into two teams (TT or CT) and then each team has a certain task depending on a map. Most popular map types are DE , CS , and AS , although first two take up 99% of the gameplay nowadays. Main tasks on DE for terrorists: plant the bomb and detonate it, while CT's job is the opposite: not let the bomb to be installed until the end of round or defuse it after it had been planted. CS maps have quite a different goals. For CS it's rescue the hostages, being kept in specific locations (mostly in a room or sometimes in different rooms) of a map while terrorists must protect them from being rescued at all cost. In a case of hostages dying, the only way to win a round for counter-terrorists is to eliminate everybody on the other team. The last one AS is meant for rescuing the VIP player who is a member of CT team. The idea is to for CTs to ensure a safe way for VIP to get to the rescue point (which is usually a helicopter). Meanwhile, terrorists' main job is to eliminate the VIP player or at least not let him to get away until the end of the round.
